

1 F.T.C. held that state professional licensing boards that are made up of the members in 2 which they regulate cannot invoke state-action antitrust immunity if they are not subject to 3 active supervision by the state; and

4 WHEREAS, the court further held that the need for supervision turns not on formal 5 creation by the legislature of the board, but rather on the risk that active market participants 6 will pursue private interests in restraining trade; and

7 WHEREAS, the court further held that when a state empowers a group of active 8 market participants to decide who can participate in its market, and on what terms, the need 9 for supervision is paramount; and

10 WHEREAS, the key issue addressed by the court was whether there existed a state 11 review mechanism that provided a realistic assurance that a non-sovereign actor's 12 anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely that party's individual 13 interests; and

14 WHEREAS, the court held that active supervision does not mean daily involvement 15 in an agency's operation or micromanagement of every decision, but rather identified several 16 constant requirements of active supervision: the supervisor must review the substance of an 17 anticompetitive decision; the supervisor must have the power to veto or modify particular 18 decisions to ensure they are in accordance with state policy and the mere potential for state 19 supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the state; and

20 WHEREAS, a task force is needed to review existing laws in order to ensure 21 compliance with the court's decision in North Carolina v. F.T.C. to minimize exposure to 22 antitrust claims, to review board composition to diversify membership, and to develop a 23 structure for meaningful oversight of the boards by the department.
